

A-12

Answer sheet Listening

1	E	-
2	A	+
3	H	+

4	5	6	7	8	9	10
c	b	d	d	b	C	a
+	+	-	-	+	+	+

Use of English

Task 1

11	B	+
12	A	-
13	D	+
14	C	+
15	A	+
16	F	+
17	C	+
18	D	+
19	A	+
20	B	+

10

Task 2

21	C	+
22	C	-

Reading

Task 1

23	Jaszkowis	+
24	Ferdinand	+
25	Sin Francis	+
26	Deo Carissimi	+
27	Deo Carissimi	+
28	Sin Francis Order	+
29	Jaszkowis	-
30	Deo Carissimi	+

13

Task 2

31	C	+
32	e	+
33	b	+
34	f	+
35	d	+

30

A-12

Writing

Some people believe that extreme sports help build your character, then define you as a person in one way or another. But is that really the case? Let's find out.

We can split the people into 2 different groups - those who agree and those who don't. Let's start with the latter.

Extreme sports do not build character. Sure, you get a lot of adrenaline that makes you think faster, but the thought process is absolutely not the same compared to if you were calm. And when it wears off, what's left of it. Some memories and possibly an injury that could ruin your life.

Then you have instances of participants of the sports being really sweet people in person and having loving families and friends. Yeah, they might act tough to hype up the audience but they could easily be the nicest and most protective person you've ever met.

Extreme sports make up a person. Participating in those makes you both think quicker because of the danger and remain calmer in stressful and physically demanding situations in your day to day life if you do enough.

I wouldn't agree with the statement. The quick thinking and calmness might help but those mainly apply if your health is endangered. You won't improve on your sympathy towards others and your care for them.

All in all, extreme sports are just good to stay healthy, that won't change how you treat others and yourself.

240 words