Hello, today I want to talk about this statement: "Some people think that extreme sports help to build character."

Well, personally I think that extreme sports can help people to release pressure and to be much calmer when they receive bad news or get struck by daily misfortunes.

And second reason I agree with this statement is people get closer to each other, well, if not physically then relationship wise because to go on a, for example, rock climbing session you have to trust your partner your life fully.

I think many people will say "almost all of extreme sports require special equipment and training" especially they talk about time wasted by professional people.

And I cannot fully disagree with that, well, you can rent equipment, it's not as expensive, and when you're confident about that you've trained enough you can buy it. And about time wasted well, it's true. But I think that everyone who has determination to go through all that training should keep trying and never give up.

Sometimes all of us need to release that steam and to maybe, grow closer to your friends I think that going to rock climbing, sky diving are perfect opportunities to do just that. 204 words
