Some people think that extreme sports help to build character. They climb different mountains, do scuba diving and even fall without parachute to build it. Though it is rather interesting experience to do extreme sports it's usually very dangerous for people's lives.

I think, I disagree with this statement. Extreme sports often hurt a lot of people, for example, many climbers often fall off the mountains and injure themselves. Such sports can cause physical and even psychological problems for some types of people.

Though these sports are very dangerous and risky, they can make people to be brave and fearless.

I don't agree with the opposing opinion, because I think, that extreme sports can help very few people to build character, but it also can break up some characters in different ways. Extreme sports can cause a lot of different troubles for people and even their friends and relatives. For example, I saw the film about the man whose name was Phillip. He was interested in extreme sports. One day something went wrong and Phillip became disable to move. He had been very sad and broken person until he met good people who helped him.

That's why I disagree with statement.
