Do extreme sports really help to build character? To get the answer we need to have a definition of a word. Character is a set of personal traits that we're living with. According to that, building a character means improving your traits and skills. So, I agree with this statement. Next seasons will prove my opinion. The first option for is that by overcoming critical situations we can become better because we need quick and rational solutions. Finding a quick answer improves speed of reaction and helps your mind stay sharp. Secondly, extreme sports can give us self-confidence, bravery and courage because ~~we take risks~~ ~~while~~ doing them. Thirdly, the better your physical condition, the clearer mind you have.

On the other hand, you may damage your health and state of your body ~~will~~ have a great influence on your volition and health.

Despite having some risks, I think that extreme sports greatly improve our personal traits and you also can have much fun and adrenaline by skydiving, snowboarding, ~~surfing~~ etc.

To sum up, it should be saying that dangerous sports can have many positive effects and can build your character, but only if you're well-prepared and focused while doing them.
