Nowadays, people usually avoid unnecessary risks and prefer the comfort to the dangerous adventures. That is why someone tends to think that extreme sports can help to build your character.

I disagree with this opinion, because extreme sports is dangerous for life, and if you are forced to do something you are scared of, it will make the fear even stronger. For example, if person is suffering from vertigo, the trip to the mountains will make him feel worse.

But from another point of view, people tend to believe extreme sports could help you to become better, for example, increase your mental and physical strength, help you gain new abilities and learn new skills.

I can not fully agree with that. The extreme sports is not something everyone likes, as someone could be more used to peace and comfort than to travelling in rough conditions. Building a character is important, but if you are forced to do it, it would not lead to good results.

To sum up, extreme sports is not for everyone, and it could help with building a character only if you want it, and I agree with that. 192 words
