Some people think that computer games are better than life. And that's understandable - these people are probably the laziest human beings on the Earth. In different computer games the life seems much easier, you do nothing but can get anything that you want, scoring virtual ~~money~~ points and earning virtual money or even buying something using real money. That's worthless and meaningless, in my opinion. You could spend the money and the time you waste by playing computer games on something that is really useful: ^{on} a ticket to cinema or a theatre ticket, winter clothes, student's book for school, even on a new computer! You also could spend it on charity. You could go for a walk, take up a new hobby, travel ~~a lot~~ ^{a bit} more than you did before... There's a great deal of ~~such things!~~ activities you can try!

So instead of to staring into your laptop screen, better call your friends and ~~invite~~ ^{suggest} them to take a little trip somewhere - you are healthy, money and time - saved, friends - happy and delighted.
