ANSWER SHEET

At some point in life one has to choose a place to settle down — the city or village. Recently, urbanisation has sky-rocketed, with the majority of the young population concentrating in cities and the amount of residents in rural areas decreasing. One should be able to understand why they are moving to the city. prof. waste is mentioned

I've conducted a research on what people consider to be advantages of living in a city. According to the data gathered, the top reason for leading a city life is having better opportunities for working and studying, and the lowest listed is accessing better facilities for sports and art education.

Concluding on the table, we may notice that the primary ~~advantages~~ advantages of living in a city are connected to career ~~development~~ and social status development, whereas comfort is less valued. ~~This~~ This could be explained by the fact that those who strive to live in cities, chase their careers and those who want a ~~calm~~ calm, isolated life, opt for rural areas.

Nevertheless, a city life has a significant drawback — pollution. Light and noise pollution, poor ecology — all this affects your health. Fortunately, sustainability specialists are working on making urban areas eco-friendly. In the meantime, you could take supplements, wear earplugs ~~and~~ and purchase black-out curtains to improve your well-being.

Finally, I think that there are some dispositional aspects that aren't taken into consideration. I wouldn't say that living in a big city is worth enduring discomfort when online working and studying are available. st.
