ANSWER SHEET

In the developed countries most of the population lives in cities. But what attracts ~~so~~ so many people and how it happens. ~~Let's~~ Let's find out. ²¹

More than third of responders moved to a city looking for better opportunities in work and study. In city, more people there are, more people get an opportunity to work and earn money. Big schools and universities tend to be the reason people move to a city, because if you get good education, you can get better work and bigger salary. ²⁵

Quarter of responders say that they ~~more~~ live in a city because it has all modern conveniences. Truly countryside and village can ^{have} get their power outages and get less drinkable water and products, so people move to a city to have stable power and water supply. ³⁰

Twenty the percents of responders moved to a city because of various entertainment and event opportunities. Usually in cities there are more cinemas, parks and restaurants because of their big population. ³⁵

In the same time, only nine percents of responders said about infrastructure and roads. I think that this happened because cities tend to have way more traffic jams and I suggest to solve this problem using public transport like buses and metro because they lower the load on the roads.

I prefer living in a big city than countryside because of work and education opportunities and modern conveniences. ³⁰
